1. Legal insider trading allows politicians to make millions. Kevin Freeman summarizes:

Our politicians in D.C. have been using the people's money to make life better for themselves and their friends, and you and I are paying the bill. We're supposed to be the masters and the government works for us.

It feels like we work for the government instead of them working for us? They get special perks, sell influence and are treated like royalty. We beg for scraps from the table, even though the table is supposed to belong to us and was bought with our money.

They say, "Rules for thee, but not for me." That seems to be the motto. We're told to wear masks, stay in our homes while they attend lavish parties or take maskless vacations.

We used to call them public servants, but now they are self-proclaimed public masters cramming down on us mandates and dictates that they themselves ignore. It wasn't supposed to be this way. It shouldn't be this way, but how else can you explain people spending millions of dollars to win a congressional seat that pays $170,000 a year?

That's nice money, but would you spend millions of dollars in a campaign for that job? Come to think of it, have you ever wondered how politicians all get so wealthy on a government salary?

CASE STUDY: How are politicians getting so wealthy?

The late Senator Harry Reid was asked that very question and he answered, "I did a very good job investing." Very good indeed. Senator Reid, you accumulated a fortune, some estimated at $10 million, all while working on a government salary that started at $77,000 a year in 1987 and never exceeded $193,000, 30 years later.

And he lived a lavish lifestyle in between. That's quite a feat.

"National Review did an analysis of Reid's stock trading and found that – how should I say it? Senator Reid was well informed. Maybe. But he's not alone. Many of our so-called public servants have profited remarkably from their time in office." –Kevin Freeman

2. How members of our congress get wealthy? Tom Fitton Shares:

It is easy to see, and Americans know it:

How it works:

- A. Politician get into positions of influence.
 - B. Once they're in a position of political influence, others who want to influence that, make certain opportunities available to them.
- Harry Reid, specifically, had business deals in Nevada, which were notoriously corrupt. That goes even beyond stock picking.
 - Then you have individual trades by members of Congress, specifically Nancy Pelosi, who initially in defending it, said it was capitalism.

"It's wonderful to have these socialists hide behind capitalism in what, to me, is evidence of insider trading. If I were Securities Exchange Commission, I would necessarily just presume that individual stock trades by members of Congress are the result of insider trading. They're in the position to know what's happening in the economy, what's coming down the pipeline, regulatorily, And so, how is it that it's not compromising their stock trading? And no one's fooled by that." –Tom Fitton

The other dirty little secret is that Congress appears to have an exemption for insider trading.

- The laws against insider trading make no specific exemption for members of Congress, but they are not prosecuted or investigated the way the private sector would be.

Note: The kind of inside information Congress uses is strangely excluded from what they monitor and prosecute.

ATTENTION: Watch for "Different Rules for you but not for me." Rarely, if at all, is Congress prosecuted and investigated for insider trading?

- There was an insider trading investigation a year or two ago, there was a Republican Senator. I think it was Senator Burr, if I recall. And he was exonerated, I guess, after the investigation.
- It has to reach a certain level before they'll even take a look at it. And the concern is that you have people in Congress there for dozens of years who are translating public service into personal gain.

The other secret sauce here is members of their family get hired on the outside as well to lobby or engage in the D.C. game. And so, it becomes a family affair.

"Look at Hunter Biden, for example. I mean, I can't imagine anybody hiring that guy, especially big Chinese corporations or Ukrainian or whatever, unless they had access to the then Vice President, now President." -Kevin Freeman

How to Better Control This:

Banning Stock Trading is an option.

"At least the Securities Exchange Commission should automatically review individualized stock transactions by members of Congress. The presumption is that they are conflicted or have insider information. And I think that's a fair presumption. Nancy Pelosi is smart enough to see, 'Well, no-one's being fooled by my explanations about how I trade stocks or have my husband trade stocks.' And even she seems to be open now to banning them directly."

-Tom Fitton

Caution: Be careful of the congressional promises to move forward on these bills and then later kill the legislation in committees

Our elected officials have lined their own pockets all the while dictating to us how we can live, how much of our earnings we keep and even whether or not we're allowed to work.

"They're waging economic war on America and profiting handsomely from it. We need to wake up and stop this gravy train of D.C. greed." –Kevin Freeman

3. Politicians guilty of Insider trading and voting policies that favor their stock positions.

A look at how the so-called public servant who arrives in D.C. with no wealth and somehow gets rich.

There are two ways to think about this.

A. Insider Trading:

There are politicians who are guilty of insider trading, something that would send any one of us in the unwashed masses to jail.

Somehow, though, for members of Congress, this has been shady but permissible, as Tom Fitton explained. Or they just didn't enforce it.

B. Influenced Decision Making – Those decisions influence all of us while politicians' profit from their vote.

This could be worse than profiting off insider trading. There is the risk that stock trading somehow influences decision making, impacting us all.

This is nothing more than vote buying using the stock market to launder money.

"It's really wrong to trade stocks based on the policies you know you'll put in place, but it's downright evil to push policies designed to favor your personal stock holdings and make yourself rich while the rest of us suffer." –Tim Fitton

- We've seen a collusion between big government and big corporations like never before in history.
- As politicians get rich, we lose any say in how our nation is run.

You know how in NASCAR the drivers wear logos of all their sponsors. Maybe politicians should do the same for fair disclosure. That way, when you see legislation mandating vaccines, you at least know who's paying for it.

In summary, we take a deeper dive into these issues.

A. Politicians and Government official personally benefit from their policies. Does this sound right? Examples could include:

- Dr. Fauci, for example, profiting from the policies that he crammed down on all of us.
- Is it right for someone in his position to hold shares of Pfizer or Moderna or even worse in Chinese companies?

B. Corporations serve the Government Agenda over shareholders

- Big corporations also serve the government's agenda.
 - They're being told to no longer look out for their shareholders, but instead to push progressive agendas like climate change, social justice, critical race theory, and LGBTQ quotas in the workplace.
 - That's why cartoon M&M's have to be rebranded to conform to progressive ideology. You don't think that's designed to sell more candy and increase profits, do you?

What this amounts to is the big corporation buying votes for the progressives while the progressives get rich, helping big corporations and they make you the loser.

4. DC Voting is often coming down to what's in the best interest of Public Policy Preferences and not the people.

Go to StopDCGreed.com to stop it! It is time to stop Corporate Tyranny now. Justin Danhof walks us through what is really happening.

Three simple questions:

A. Who should Congress serve?

It's the American people!

B. Who should Corporations serve?

Their owners and for publicly traded companies, this means the shareholders. If they want to stay in business, they need to serve the customer as well.

C. Who are the companies and Congress actually serving and why?

They're serving themselves

"When we're talking about insider trading with members of Congress, folks who come in with not very much money and they leave millionaires with multiple mansions in multiple states, you have to put two and two together that they're the ones that are serving their own self-interest.

When we're talking about public policymakers like Janet Yellen, or Jerome Powell, or Gary Gensler, at the SEC. They're serving their worldview by pushing ESG mandates, boards of directors, diversity quotas.

This serves their public policy preferences. This doesn't serve customers. This doesn't serve the American people. It doesn't serve the public."
—Justin Danhof

WARNING: They're really pushing their public policy preferences, the Davos world view, onto the American people against our will.

The Question is who's serving the American people?

There are leaders that are engaged in the process of pushing back on Woke Capitalism, pushing back on ESG (environmental, social justice, and corporate governance) nonsense.

- Economic War Room® has been leading on this topic and the threat that exists. Through the NSIC institute they are equipping financial advisors to understand what ESG really means and how to identify investments that stand for Liberty,

- StopCorporateTyranny.com is a coalition that has been working to raise awareness and finally

“ESG isn’t in the best interest of shareholders. This is in the best interest of activist investors like Larry Fink, who try and dictate corporate action with passive investment money. And it really has to stop.”—Justin Danhof

Who wins with ESG?

Larry Fink/BlackRock is probably the biggest winner, because again, they’re the largest asset manager in the world, $10 trillion in assets under management, and Fink uses that money to influence corporate behavior.

- He can put environmental mandates on corporations that cripple shareholders.
- He can put dissident climate change activists on boards like he did last year at Exxon.
 - There are now three board members of Exxon whose stated goal would bankrupt the company by eliminating fossil fuels to advance their worldview on the environment.

Another big winner in all of this, especially when it comes to the regulatory regime, is the big business of Larry Fink teaming up with Jerome Powell, Gary Gensler and even China.

ALERT: The SEC upheld the NASDAQ rule, which requires board diversity. Diversity is defined as having a woman on your board and an underrepresented minority or an LGBTQ member. Guess who they exempted? Chinese companies! They exempt them from other ESG criteria as well:

- When we put ESG standards on American businesses, that increases the cost of doing business here at home.
- But guess what? There’s no environmental concern with Chinese stocks. Yet, China is the worst polluter.
- Social issues do not exist. They’re enslaving minority Muslim populations over there while Wall Street turns a blind eye.

“China is the biggest victor in all of our silly ESG pushes at home that harm American investors and help the Chinese Communist Party. It’s really, really sad.” –Justin Danhof

5. It’s time to stop the gravy train by ending congressional insider trading.

Government officials should not be able to profit from the policies that they’re forcing on the American people.

- They shouldn’t be able to invest in companies that they are then influencing with information that’s not otherwise publicly available.
- The average American would be thrown in jail if we did anything even close to what Nancy Pelosi and her cohorts do.
- This is happening from the left and right and should be a bipartisan issue.

6. Ban Congressional Insider Trading – Pelosi says “No,” then later says “Yes?” Do not be fooled!

Jenny Beth Martin She was there at the beginning of the Tea Party in 2009 and has proven to be a true leader in the movement. She’s been named by Time Magazine as one of the 100 most influential people in the world.

Congressional influence is corrupt - It’s hard to ignore things like Nancy Pelosi and her husband building $120 million dollar fortune while trading stocks using what many believe may be legal, but unethical insider trading.

- The Big Tech companies that tell us what to think and what we’re allowed to say, and they get a free pass from the government.
- Those in Congress who should be protecting us, but they own stocks in those same companies and know in advance what’s going to happen with them.

Multiple Luxury Sub Zero refrigerators and $12.00/pint ice cream. Pelosi is out of touch with the American people:

"It's one thing if you can afford it, but showing off with it, trying to look like you're hip and cool and plugged in with the average American, that is not the way to do it. I certainly don't buy $12 a pint ice cream and I don't think most Americans do."—Jenny Beth Martin

A recent poll found that three quarters of voters want to ban congressional stock trading because they believe that Congress has an unfair advantage. And Nancy Pelosi said, "I have a right to trade stocks."

- She has a right to trade stocks, but she doesn't have the right to know private things that are going to happen and then trade stocks.
- As speaker, she controls what kind of bills may be passing into law that game the system to advantage one company over another before the rest of the public does and then can act on that kind of knowledge.

"I just think that isn't the way that our system should have been set up. It certainly isn't taking the actions that I would expect a public servant to take. And so, I just think that this is again just another example of how out of touch she is with average Americans."—Jenny Beth Martin

Jenny Beth Martin as it relates to banning insider trading by Congress?

"I think we should ban insider trading by Congress. And actually, Senator Josh Hawley has a bill that he has introduced to do just that, to ban congressional insider trading. It would prohibit the elected member and their spouse from trading stocks"—Jenny Beth Martin.

- They still could be inside of mutual funds or treasury bonds, but not individual stocks.
- And I think that is a way to make what they are doing a bit actually more fair, and that is a good approach to take.

“What we’re seeing right now from people who are in Congress who have amassed wealth, especially if they’re amassing wealth based on the knowledge of bills that will or will not pass and gaming the system in that manner, isn’t fair. A Fortune 500 company would not be allowed to do that and to trade stock that way. It’s not right for members of Congress to do it either.” - Jenny Beth Martin

The question becomes if they own stock in something, would they vote the right way? Would they vote for what’s good for the American people, or are they going to vote to support their interests?

- This creates a real problem because you don’t know what is motivating them.
- Even if they want to represent the people as fairly as they possibly can, their own personal self-interests are going to rise to the top. That is human nature.

“I think that most Americans expect that people who step up and run for elected office should do so because they want to actually serve the public, not because they want to make a personal profit and fortune from their work as an elected official.”—Jenny Beth Martin

Key issues to focus on:

- We need to be looking at what is going on with that and how people sell influence to Congress.
- Also, we need to be looking at is some people who actually go and make the regulations who are not even elected officials. Think Hunter Biden.

"I think we've got to worry about this too with Hunter Biden taking all this money from Chinese companies and investing in Chinese companies and then giving a piece to 'the big guy.' I mean, I think that's equally evil." -Kevin Freeman

- We need to be looking at what is going on with that and how people sell influence to Congress. And also, one other area that I think we need to be looking at is some people who actually go and make the regulations who are not even elected officials.
 - We saw with Hunter Biden in the attempts to sell access, in the attempts to – it appears that it's an attempt to try to cover up how money is flowing to Joe Biden. That is just simply wrong.
 - His art sales seem to be a weird type of money laundering and then it's going through artwork and all these other things.
 - This is not what we want from our public servants.

Also, look and support Senator Hawley's bill. This a way to help guard against that human nature and actually help Congress live up to what we expect from public servants. But it MUST NOT be watered down!

The super majority of Americans think that it is wrong for Congress to take advantage of the system this way, and they think that it is inherently unfair. -Jenny Beth Martin

Why You Should Care:

The bottom line: This a form of insider trading has been allowed for too long in Washington, D.C., and that creates the risk of serious corruption.

- Politicians have gotten wealthy and their voting is compromised.
- They, too often work for big corporate interests, which have sold out to extreme progressive policies. This is economic warfare, pure and simple.
- It's an incestuous collaboration of big government, big tech, big corporations and progressive activists.
