

American Innovation: Financial Democracy

The birth of the United States of America marked the beginning of a new era. Great leaders designed a government with limitations to ensure that government remained a slave to its people and could not subject them to the tyranny most had experienced throughout history. Though, this was only the beginning. Other brilliant minds took this new philosophy to heart and went to work applying these principles of liberty to every aspect of life. American innovation was marked by the desire to improve life for all people as much as possible. One of these great inventions was capitalism. This new economic system led to a massive burst in productivity as entrepreneurs sprung up all over the nation with new technologies and ideas. Eventually the U.S. stock market was formed. It was to be a financial market where all people would be able to invest their money in new ideas to further the efforts of entrepreneurs while also providing potential returns to the average American shareholder.

Sadly, times have changed. The governing bodies that once served the people and protected their rights have instead printed legislation that limits the average American from access to investment opportunities. Thus, the real wealth gap was formed and the extremely wealthy have only gained more wealth as the average American has seen little to no improvement to their standard of living for decades.

Impact of Innovation

Innovation has been at the forefront of American greatness. From new military tactics credited to some of America's great generals, to new technology like electricity, airplanes, sonar, telephones, automobiles, nuclear power, etc. America's vision of a better and brighter tomorrow has provided humanity with some of its most impactful inventions.

While some may seem obvious, perhaps the greatest American invention is American-style capitalism. This revolutionary economic system paved the way for industrialism, new inventions, and solutions to major world issues like extreme poverty.

In recent years, capitalism has come under attack by the Woke regime that seeks to undermine the pillars that America's greatness was built upon. What better target than the financial system that has allowed America to flourish and outgrow every despot who would dare to challenge Liberty.

- » The Woke regime has made claims of capitalism causing or perpetuating extreme poverty in developing nations.

- » While there are still major issues to be resolved, the facts cannot be denied.
 - Since 1820 (the early days of capitalism) global extreme poverty has declined from 94% of people to 72% in 1950 and 9.6% in 2015.
- » The areas in the world that have struggled to experience the benefits of capitalism have primarily been nations that lived under socialist rule or have been war torn.

In all cases, American capitalism has sought to provide aid in the process of growth and development.

Capitalism as an idea did not accomplish this task alone. The thoughts, prayers, pipe dreams, blood, sweat, and tears of innovators provided massive improvements in technology that helped to provide solutions to a myriad of human problems. Farming inventions helped to provide food at a lower cost to people who may not have been able to afford much. Improved nutrition leads to better brain development which allowed the next generation to step up to the plate with even more brain power. Creative solutions in engineering made transportation faster and more reliable which furthered the spread of fresh food and new ideas. The American dream, for many, became reality.

Lessons from History –

America is not the first nation to discover the principle of innovation. Ancient Rome was known for its innovative spirit. Many historians credit Rome's rise to prominence to its superior culture of innovation.

Before Rome, Italy was ruled by the Etruscan League. Etruscans had very similar values, gods, culture, and even military strategy to Rome. However, Rome became the dominant force on the Italian peninsula when they took Etruscan traditions and improved upon them. Most notably was the formation of an organized military. The Etruscans had a unique style and the Romans decided to take this idea to the next level. Roman legions have gone down in history as one of the most effective military forces of all time.

Rome also improved technology in many other areas. Much like their beginnings, Roman industry was fueled by improvements to the technologies of others. Greek architecture was improved with Roman building techniques and concrete manufacturing. Etruscan Arches were further developed and became central to Roman culture through aqueduct production. Aqueducts were then applied to gold mining as rushing water could be used to reveal the valuable metal and wash away other debris. Greek mathematics and engineering were further studied and applied to construction tools, military equipment, and civilian transportation. The ancient world flourished under Roman rule as agricultural technology was improved and surplus became the norm.

CAUTION: Despite their success, Rome eventually fell. The rise of extreme wealth and the Pax Romana (100 years of peace) led to an overfed ruling class that sought to further their own wealth and not to improve the status of the average Roman citizen.

The populace went from people who were to be served by the senate and the emperor to people who were to be distracted by bread and games so that the elite of their day could live lavishly and further their own goals. Roman society crumbled as a result of such greed.

“If we’re not growing, we necessarily are shrinking. If our country is not becoming more prosperous, we’re going to become poorer. And it’s a choice we have to make.” –Christopher Buskirk

1. The Rise of American Innovation

Much like the early days of Rome, America was founded on the principles of ingenuity, innovation, and freedom of thought and expression.

The first settlers abandoned the mild comforts afforded by life in Europe to carve their own destinies into American soil. The land they left behind was highly populated and successful, however, it had become highly regulated. Archaic property laws were still in place from the medieval and renaissance eras. For average citizens, there was not much hope that your standard of living would improve. Intellectual elites had put in place limitations on the common folk that hindered their ability to command their own destinies and create a brighter future for their children. This group of industrious risk takers wanted nothing more than to have a say in their future and to create a better world than the one they had experienced so far.

This driving force, a desire to leave a legacy where your children would grow up in a better world than you did with more opportunities than you had, is what inspired generation after generation of Americans to build this great nation. From the clean slate of the settlers to the writing of the Constitution, and the western expansion, America was fueled by a dream of a new nation where life would always be better tomorrow than it was today.

“I’m going to make my life better. I’m going to make my family’s life better. I’m going to make my nation’s life better... I’m doing this because I’m going to use my time, talent, and treasure to serve God.” – Christopher Buskirk

2. The Decline of American Innovation

In the early 1900’s America was clearly ascending the mountain of innovation as new ideas sprung up regularly and technology advanced at an unprecedented rate. New inventions like the automobile, airplane, radio, telephone, and electricity improved the lives of all Americans as they spread across the continent. The nation was, literally, electrified with excitement. New and massive discoveries and inventions seemed to be revealed to the world almost every month as these improvements allowed for expedited transfer of both information and products.

Sadly, the rate of technological advancement began to decline in the late 1900s and the impact innovations of today seem to pale in comparison to those that came before. While smart phones, watches, fridges, cars, etc. are fascinating, they have not made the intense positive impacts to the standard of living that previous advances provided. Since the invention of the internet, most technological advances have been small improvements to the great technologies already available to the average American.

- » Phones became wireless which improved the flow of information. This may save people a few hours as compared to the original telephone, where they waited until the other person heard the message. However, these few hours do not compare to the incredible impact telephones had as compared to sending letters by boat or horse. Weeks or even months could be saved and information could travel almost instantly for the first time.
- » Automobiles made it possible for Americans to live in the suburbs and commute to the cities, this drastically improved the standard of living. Modern improvements to automobiles are notable but have not had as great an impact. Families may have 2 cars or cars with cool features, but their standard of living has been mildly impacted.
- » Jet plane travel was already available in the 1960s and connected the East and West coast in a new way. Ideas, capital, and people could travel in a few hours what had taken days or even weeks before. The advancement of flight technology has made such flights more readily available, but the seats are smaller, comfort has declined, and more people are crammed together. The flight's duration is almost unaffected.

Ultimately, life in the 2020's is not all that different to life in the 1960's. It is this lack of intense improvements to the standard of living for average Americans that denotes a decline of American innovation.

The science fiction of the 1950s-70s imagined a world with flying cars, and other unbelievable technologies that would improve the daily life of every American. The Jetsons and Back to the Future envisioned a world that was drastically different and more advanced than the world of their creators. Unfortunately, the world they envisioned has not yet come. Instead of devoting time to major technological advances, resources have primarily been allocated to the repurposing of technology to enslave consumers and improve the profits of the elite.

“You used to be able to just go buy Microsoft Word, now they want to sell it to you for ten bucks a month.” –Christopher Buskirk

ATTENTION: For more information about the rise and decline of American innovation check out Christopher Buskirk’s new book “AMERICA and the ART of the Possible. Restoring National Vitality in an Age of Decay.”

3. America’s Wealth Gap

In much the same manner as ancient Rome, the elite of America today have become greedy and fat. Politicians, who were once public servants, have been corrupted by the temptations presented by the extremely wealthy.

Now, legislation has been passed that limits access to early-stage funding rounds of entrepreneurial ventures. Instead, venture capital (VC) has stepped in and blocks the average American from ‘alpha’ (the return on an investment that’s incrementally more than a benchmark index).

“If you bought Uber on the initial public offering, all the cream was gone. It was taken by that top 1/10 of 1% who got in the private equity deal. But the financial markets excluded the average individual from participating. So, we need the innovation, but we also need the opportunity to open it up for people to invest.” – Kevin Freeman

By preventing average Americans from investing in early-stage opportunities, the elite reserve these massive gains for themselves. However, investments only make money if you are able to liquidate, or sell, your share in the company.

In the olden days, average Americans could purchase stock when a company went public and would see potentially massive returns on investment as they were involved in the earliest stages of the company's growth.

Today when a company goes public it is often much further along in its life cycle.

Why would the companies not go public sooner and get access to more capital?

Because the greedy reserve the big gains for private equity.

Why don't average citizens invest in private equity then? They can't. The SEC regulations limit private equity opportunities to the wealthy for the most part.

- » Instead, companies are forced to turn to extremely wealthy investors to provide starting capital. Those investors take on the major risks associated with startups but with higher risk there comes the potential for greater rewards.

Key Point:

- » Instead of allowing average Americans to participate in these high-risk opportunities, the elite choose to use the initial public offering (IPO) process as an opportunity to liquidate their early-stage investment by selling their shares to the public at a much higher value than they originally invested.
 - In this way the stock market has been repurposed to assist the elite in their mission for wealth, control, and dominance. The people who suffer? Everyone else.

WARNING: The system prevents most Americans from gaining wealth while the elite continue to siphon funds from the American people for their own purposes.

4. Beware of the Distractions

The economic rule of the elites was carefully planned and hidden by similar tactics that were employed by elite in ancient Rome: Bread and Games.

Today we see distractions to keep the average American focused on something else. Just like in ancient Rome, specific tactics are being used to cover the elite as they work to gain more and more control of the people.

While the rise of major sporting events is most similar to the ancient coliseum, the political battlefield required a more unique touch.

- » To distract citizens from their insidious plots, the elite invented new political and cultural battles that they could use to divide the nation.
- » Topics like race and gender were exploited as easy ways to get citizens to squabble over instead of focusing on things that concretely improve living standards.
- » Political battles, rumors of war, and scandals sap the energy from citizens that could be spent honing talents and skills.
- » Hollywood and the growth of media shifted from news and meaningful entertainment to propaganda, indoctrination, and perhaps most importantly, distraction.
- » The rise of social media whittled away at the hours of boredom that once inspired new hobbies and innovative ideas.

This purpose of this attempt to subvert the American people away from the ingenuity and industriousness that once sparked the greatest technological revolutions in history was made clear during the COVID pandemic of 2020.

“We were risk takers. Now, we’re risk averse, and we’re demanding that the government protect us from any risk, which is the whole COVID shutdown, the masks, everything... and of course, to the government, that’s an opportunity for power.” – Kevin Freeman

The elite desire complete control. Enforcing that on the people is very difficult, especially in an America that deeply values freedom and innovation. However, it is very easy if you can trick the people into asking for it themselves.

The elite want full control.

- » Control of innovation: green energy legislation would limit other innovations.
- » Control of health: COVID shutdowns and vaccine mandates.
- » Control of wealth: legislation preventing access to capital and investment alpha.

With even these three areas of control, the elite gain control of the future. Instead of the clean slate and the opportunity to carve your own legacy into the soil like the settlers who came before, the elite will determine what the future will look like for everyone.

“The World Economic Forum’s threat... You will own nothing and be happy. They’re not saying you won’t have all these services. It’s just that you won’t own them. You’ll be enslaved to them.” – Kevin Freeman

WARNING: The World Economic Forum wants to decide your future, and the future of your children, for you.

5. Dangers of Excessive Risk Aversion – The Economic War of the Heart

Risk aversion includes fear. Certainly, it is wise to be prudent. But excessive fear can be a serious problem.

IMPORTANT: This is why it is essential to win the Economic War of the Heart.

In Matthew 25:14-30 Jesus shares the parable of the talents. The story begins with a master (God) who entrusts his servants (people) with the wealth of the master’s estate. Each servant has a different strategy of how to handle the money. One is extremely successful and brings the master a large return, the second is also successful in providing return, sadly the third servant is afraid and buries the money because he fears losing what his master entrusted to him.

Today, many Americans are scared of losing the money God has entrusted to them. That can be rational and justified. But excessive fear can be debilitating.

“Excessive risk aversion actually heightens your risk. Life is full of risk. If you try and protect yourself from any downside, you never accomplish anything.” – Christopher Buskirk

Instead of risk aversion, every hero in the Bible saw risk and charged at it with fervor and faith.

David risked his life to challenge Goliath, Abraham risked his family seeking an unknown “Promised Land,” Caleb, Esther, Gideon, Moses, the list goes on. In each story the children of God risked everything to obey God... and God came through. He is faithful.

This was also the story of America.

- » Pilgrims risked their lives to build a new home on distant shores. God provided.
- » The founding fathers challenged the greatest power the world had ever seen to establish a new nation under God. God provided.
- » Western expansion was fueled by dreamers who risked their lives to build a better future for their families. God provided.
- » Union soldiers risked everything to preserve America and end slavery. God provided.
- » U.S. troops took massive risks in WWI and WWII. God provided.
- » Of course, risk can result in loss and a hard price to pay. But the rewards can be great as well.

Throughout each of these monumental achievements, Americans relied on the resources God provided and were willing to take major risks to see God’s goodness manifest in the lives of the people.

American history is full of individuals who won the economic war of the heart. They were not afraid, they charged into the fray, and they made their money work for them to achieve the impossible and against all odds America rose to become the most prosperous and powerful nation in the world.

This standard of faith and risk over fear can be adopted again and establish a groundwork for the betterment of the future for America and her citizens.

Every American should take ownership of what God has entrusted them with and put their money to work! But this requires wisdom and prudence. That's where a financial advisor can prove helpful in balancing the issues of risk and reward. Unfortunately, the system appears to preclude the opportunity to take a prudent risk and enjoy the rewards, at least for many.

6. The Rise of Anti-Elite Movements –

Reality has set in. The wealth gap is real. It hardly matters where you are on the political spectrum, everyone can see that America is not quite the land of opportunity it once was.

America may still provide more opportunity than anywhere else in the world, but the true American dream has run out of fuel.

- » Politicians like Bernie Sanders and Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez have risen to prominence on the left because they have targeted the disenfranchised youth of today who recognize the need for financial reform.
- » However, they have provided “solutions” that would only further the wealth gap in the long term. With ideas of increased taxes and more government handouts through democratic-socialist “reforms,” they have inspired the ill-informed.

“We’re bred to believe in the American dream and we should believe in it, and then when it feels like a broken promise, you wind up getting Bernie Sanders... AOC... all of this tension in our politics because people feel like they were betrayed.”

–Christopher Buskirk

The wealth gap is not a partisan issue, but the solutions can be very partisan.

Thankfully, a younger generation of conservative leaders has begun to battle for a healthier reform rooted in liberty.

- » New Republicans have begun representing voters and challenging other politicians (even those in their own party) over their involvement with the elite.
- » This is a major sign that conservative voters have realized the danger of the elites and the wealth gap.
- » New solutions have begun to take rise as the next generation seeks an effective and long-lasting solution to democratize wealth, investing, and innovation. This will be the basis for American growth and the expansion of liberty around the world for generations to come.

7. The Gold Standard | The US Dollar?

One of the main causes of this wealth gap can be attributed to the lack of a gold-standard for the US dollar. Up until the 1970's the US dollar was backed by Gold and would maintain a stable value.

- » Since the 1970's the elites have been able to abuse and manipulate the US dollar through the national reserve, international banks, and the stock market.
- » This has separated the American people from the potential gains and the economic growth of the market.

NOTE: This is why we have helped to birth the idea of Transactional Gold. Learn more in Episodes 224, 192, and 184. Also look at the Texas Bill just filed to make this happen: <https://capitol.texas.gov/BillLookup/History.aspx?LegSess=88R&Bill=SB2334>. More on this to come!

⚠ WARNING: If American citizens do not stand up for free-market solutions, a controlled market will strip the American people of their liberty and America will fall. It's not too late!

⚠ ATTENTION: A new hope: Americans are waking up and voting for liberty.

Today's young conservatives are looking for leaders who will fight the establishment, abolish bad legislation, and restore American liberty and democratic capitalism.

There is hope because this generation is awake and willing to take the risks required to restore the pillars of innovation and freedom that make America great.

8. America and the Art of the Possible

Another major change is the inspiration provided by some of America's top innovators.

- » Individuals like Elon Musk have gained large followings as they inspire the younger generations to innovate and create by taking prudent risks.
- » The dormancy of American innovation is on the decline. What must happen now is the restoration of the support structures that provided greater opportunities for innovators and the average American investor.
- » As major innovations are being made in space, printed manufacturing, genetic modification, artificial intelligence, etc. the future of America can still be bright. But that opportunity must be shared with normal people, not just the elite.

The next great innovations that propel humanity into another era of greatness can be made by Americans.

There is no other nation on earth that provides the opportunities that the US does. These opportunities, blended with American patriotism and ingenuity make America the ideal place for the creation of such inspired technological advancements. While America may not currently provide what it once did, there is still no greater alternative. As major political changes are on the horizon, hope for even greater opportunities and the creation of a more suitable environment for major technological advancements is restored.

ATTENTION: It will come down to what Americans decide.

- » Will America be a nation that reestablishes herself as the home of the greatest innovations and opportunities?
- » Or will Americans sit idly by and watch as the once great nation crumbles to dust like its Roman predecessor?

America is a nation founded on the principles of individual liberty and freedom where the financial systems were to be of the people, by the people, and for the people. This was the case throughout the 20th century as individual Americans came together to invest in projects and innovations that would improve the standard of living for all Americans, and often the rest of the world.

Financial opportunities and innovations must belong to the people and not be regulated by any governing body who could ever seek to subdue and control the majority in favor of a wealthy minority.
