

The Four Horseman of the American Apocalypse The Yellow Horse: Traitors, Cowards, and Fools

“A nation can survive its fools, and even the ambitious. But it cannot survive treason from within. An enemy at the gates is less formidable, for he is known and carries his banner openly. But the traitor moves amongst those within the gate freely, his sly whispers rustling through all the alleys, heard in the very halls of government itself.”

— Marcus Tullius Cicero (commonly attributed)

America now faces a form of internal challenge that does not resemble traditional warfare. Rather than tanks, missiles, or cyber-attacks alone, foreign adversaries and aligned ideological movements are strategically deploying mass migration, exploiting immigration systems, demographic change, and political participation rules to erode national security, cultural unity, and political stability. They are assisted in this process by a combination of traitors, cowards, and fools. The traitor profits from the invasion. The coward fears questioning this activity, so as not to be called racist. The fools have been led to believe that the effort is benign and perhaps beneficial. All are exploited by the Red, Green, and Blue Horsemen in attacking our country. This quiet and persistent subtle invasion operates through open borders, humanitarian pathways, and policy loopholes to reshape the nation from within.

Immigration has become a central tool of modern geopolitical and civilizational competition. This Economic Battle Plan™ examines three key areas:

- » How these strategies operate,
- » Why they are uniquely difficult to deter using conventional national-security tools, and
- » What policy and civic responses are necessary to protect American sovereignty, institutional resilience, and social cohesion.

In this briefing we will discuss the following:

- » Weaponized Immigration Is Being Used as a Strategic Attack on the United States
- » The Red/Green/Blue Alliance and Civilizational Strategies to Reshape the United States from Within
- » Mexico's Migration-Based Influence and Reconquista Strategy
- » China's Exploitation of Birthright Citizenship and Long-Term Political Subversion
- » Concrete Policy Failures and Proposed Countermeasures to Close the Exploitation Gaps

YOUR MISSION: Equip yourself with the knowledge to recognize and counter foreign exploitation of U.S. immigration policies, empowering you to advocate for reforms that protect national sovereignty and prevent internal subversion.

WHY YOU SHOULD CARE

- » Weaponized immigration directly undermines U.S. security by introducing criminals, spies, and unrest, potentially leading to increased crime rates and social division that affect communities nationwide.
- » This alliance fosters ideological conflicts that could manifest in local protests, policy shifts, or cultural changes, personally impacting your daily life through altered community dynamics or heightened political tensions.
- » Gaining insight into Mexico's strategies reveals how demographic shifts in border states could influence local economies, education, and voting patterns, helping you anticipate and mitigate risks to regional stability.
- » China's tactics create a hidden network of dual-loyalty citizens who may influence elections or sponsor foreign relatives, directly affecting your voice in democracy and the integrity of national decision-making.
- » Understanding policy failures equips you to support targeted reforms, benefiting you by fostering a more secure environment where immigration serves national interests rather than exposing vulnerabilities.

1. Weaponized Immigration Is Being Used as a Strategic Attack on the United States

From a national-security perspective, weaponized immigration is not a humanitarian accident—it is the deliberate use of large-scale population movement by foreign governments and aligned networks as a tool of state and ideological warfare.

Instead of tanks or missiles, this strategy exploits humanitarian systems, border policy, and deep domestic political divisions to destabilize a target nation from within.

When migration flows are intentionally manipulated or seeded with criminals, extremists, and intelligence operatives, the results are predictable: spikes in crime, social instability, and mounting strain on law enforcement, courts, schools, and local governments.

History has already demonstrated how powerful this tactic can be. The 1980 Mariel boatlift from Cuba showed how a hostile regime could deliberately inject destabilizing actors into the United States, triggering violence and institutional disruption while avoiding any direct military confrontation.

“[Igor Panarin] said financial and demographic trends will provoke a political and social crisis. Social unrest, up to and including a civil war, will follow. And he said mass immigration is the key.”

—Kevin Freeman

This is what makes the strategy so dangerous. Unlike Pearl Harbor or the attacks of September 11—events that produced immediate national unity and decisive security responses—this form of conflict unfolds slowly, legally, and often invisibly.

It embeds itself inside everyday systems: immigration courts, welfare programs, school districts, elections, and local governance. Compassion, asylum policy, and humanitarian infrastructure become the delivery mechanism.

The true strategic effect is not short-term disruption, but long-term demographic and political transformation.

Over time, sustained migration pressure reshapes voting blocs, public policy priorities, and institutional culture—creating downstream consequences that can include civil unrest, economic stress, and declining public trust in government.

Because there is no obvious battlefield and no obvious aggressor to confront, the strategy is uniquely difficult to deter using traditional national-security tools.

This first layer of pressure sets the conditions for something even more concerning: coordinated ideological movements that are prepared to capitalize on the demographic and institutional openings created by mass migration.

Attention: Foreign adversaries are using mass migration as an asymmetrical weapon to infiltrate and destabilize the United States by bypassing military defenses and exploiting humanitarian and border systems.

2. The Red/Green/Blue Alliance and Civilizational Strategies to Reshape the United States from Within

Once demographic pressure is created through mass migration, the next phase is organized ideological exploitation of the political and cultural space that follows.

This is best understood through what is commonly called the Red/Green/Blue alliance—a tactical partnership between Marxist and revolutionary left movements (“red”) with Islamist movements (“green”) and globalist power structures (“blue”).

Although these movements are rooted in fundamentally incompatible worldviews—atheism on one side, theocratic rule on another, and elitist hedonism on the other—the three-way partnership is not built on shared beliefs.

It is built on a shared objective: weakening Western civilization and dismantling the political and constitutional foundations of the United States.

The alliance itself did not emerge in isolation. It developed through direct engagement between Marxist revolutionary figures and Islamist leadership, including meetings such as the 2007 gathering in Tehran between descendants of Che Guevara and Iranian clerics, all funded by the globalist elite.

The unifying force was not ideology, but a common hostility toward the United States as a sovereign nation and the Western order it represents.

“They don’t agree on a lot of things, but they agree on one thing — the need to destroy the United States.” –Peter Schweizer

Participants inside this movement openly acknowledge that the relationship is temporary.

Islamist leaders have described the partnership as a marriage of convenience, making clear that progressive and revolutionary allies are ultimately expected to become targets once Western institutions are weakened and replaced.

In other words, today's political partners are viewed as tomorrow's enemies to be overthrown.

Closely connected to this alliance is what is commonly described as civilizational jihad—a non-military campaign focused on reshaping political culture, legal norms, and governing institutions through migration, demographic concentration, and disciplined political organization.

Rather than seeking open confrontation, the strategy relies on long-term infiltration and influence, often operating under the language of multiculturalism and social justice.

A central operational feature of this approach is not majority support, but political leverage. Small, highly disciplined blocs can dominate low-turnout primaries and local elections, capture school boards and municipal offices, and gradually reshape institutional behavior without broad public visibility.

In the United States, this has included the formation of ideological enclaves enforcing Sharia Law and coordinated efforts to elevate sympathetic candidates in major cities and local jurisdictions.

We've seen enclaves formed in Michigan and Minnesota, while Texas and Florida appear to be targeted next. Hijra is an Islamic migration doctrine based on the Quran. The example is where the Islamic prophet Muhammad entered the Jewish city of Medina, welcomed as a stranger. In a short period, he overthrew the citizens, personally overseeing the beheading of more than 600 citizens and enslaving other survivors. Recently, New York's new mayor Mamdani, encouraged New Yorkers to welcome the strangers just as Medina had. He did not, however, explain how badly it turned out for them. No wonder places like Texas are proposing a total ban of Sharia Law.

As the previous section showed how population flows create strategic openings, this alliance explains how those openings are converted into lasting political and cultural power—preparing the ground for direct foreign-state involvement and institutional influence.

Attention: The Red/Green/Blue alliance operates as a tactical and temporary partnership that uses disciplined minority blocs and civilizational influence campaigns to reshape American institutions from within, without ever needing to win national majorities.

3. Mexico's Migration-Based Influence and Reconquista Strategy

After demographic pressure and ideological organization take hold, the next layer of vulnerability comes from direct foreign-state engagement inside American communities.

Mexico must be understood not simply as a country of origin for migrants, but as an active participant in long-term political and cultural influence operations inside the United States.

This strategy is commonly described as Reconquista—a demographic and cultural campaign aimed at restoring influence over territories lost in the nineteenth century, particularly across the American Southwest.

Migration is treated not primarily as a humanitarian or economic issue, but as a strategic opportunity to extend national influence through demographic concentration and institutional leverage.

“Mexico views mass migration not as a terrible thing for them, but as a good thing. Not only do they get $60 billion a year in remittances back into the country, but they also view this as an opportunity to extend their sovereignty in the United States, and they’ve set up parallel government institutions inside our country to mobilize and activate migrants in a way that is going to be potently used against us.” —Peter Schweizer

In practical terms, this approach relies on building parallel institutions designed to organize and activate migrant communities, sustaining deep consular engagement, and deploying state-supported media aimed directly at Mexican nationals living in the United States.

One of the most consequential instruments is the annual distribution of approximately one million government-produced Spanish-language textbooks into U.S. school districts—materials that are significantly more ideological than standard American curricula and that frame historical and political narratives in ways that reinforce long-term identity alignment with Mexico rather than civic integration into American society.

This strategy is reinforced through state-run media platforms such as Migrant TV, which provide highly politicized programming to migrant audiences, promote specific political narratives, and encourage civic mobilization inside U.S. communities.

The focus is not limited to election cycles. It is built around long-term cultural conditioning, identity formation, and sustained political organization—especially in high-impact states such as California, Arizona, and Texas, where migrant populations approach or exceed forty percent in some regions.

As the previous section showed how ideological networks convert demographic concentration into political leverage, this state-level influence infrastructure now supplies the organizational and narrative tools needed to sustain that leverage over time—creating a durable foreign footprint inside American civic life.

Attention: Mexico leverages migration, education, media, and organized community engagement to extend influence inside the United States and advance long-term “Reconquista” objectives through demographic and institutional control.

4. China’s Exploitation of Birthright Citizenship and Long-Term Political Subversion

After demographic pressure and ideological organization are established, the next escalation is far more deliberate and long-term in design. China is not merely exploiting weaknesses in U.S. immigration law—it is executing a structured population-and-citizenship strategy aimed at future political influence inside the United States.

At the center of this strategy is what is commonly known as birth tourism—the deliberate practice of arranging for children of elite Chinese families to be born on U.S. soil to secure American citizenship.

Those children are then returned to China and raised inside the Chinese Communist Party's political and educational system.

Over time, this has created what can best be described as a Manchurian generation—a cohort of U.S. citizens who were raised and politically socialized inside an adversarial regime.

"Beginning in 2030, the first wave of these, 'U.S. citizens' living in China are going to be able to start voting. So, we're looking at a million American citizens who have been raised in China. And these are the children of the Chinese Communist Party elite. This birth tourism that exploits birthright citizenship has been pushed by the CCP. They actually explained to the Chinese elite how to do this in articles in the People's Daily. And the people who do this are military officers, intelligence officers. These people are going to be able to start voting in our elections, and when they turn 21, they're going to be able to sponsor their parents to come to the United States as permanent residents." —Peter Schweizer

The implications of this strategy are profound. These individuals will possess the full legal rights of American citizenship while having been educated and formed under a foreign authoritarian system.

They will be eligible to vote in U.S. elections, sponsor parents and extended family members for permanent residency, and operate freely inside American political, academic, and professional institutions.

The program is not accidental or informal. It is openly promoted inside Chinese state media and is specifically targeted toward families connected to the Chinese Communist Party, the military, and the intelligence services.

It represents a long-range political investment—one designed to mature quietly, legally, and largely outside the awareness of American voters and policymakers.

When combined with broader Chinese influence activity inside the United States—including overseas police stations, financial networks, and organized intelligence operations—birthright exploitation becomes part of a much larger architecture of political, economic, and informational leverage.

The objective is not short-term disruption. It is durable access to American institutions and long-term influence over American decision-making.

As the previous section showed how ideological alliances convert demographic concentration into institutional control, this strategy shows how citizenship itself can be converted into a geopolitical asset—setting the stage for the final issue: how current policy failures allow all of these systems to continue operating largely unchecked.

Attention: Citizenship rules can be exploited to create a future population of legally empowered individuals whose political formation occurred inside an adversarial system—creating long-term influence inside the United States.

5. Concrete Policy Failures and Proposed Countermeasures to Close the Exploitation Gaps

The vulnerabilities that allow demographic pressure, ideological coordination, and foreign-state influence to operate inside the United States are not accidental. They are the product of weak screening, permissive residency and citizenship rules, and years of inconsistent enforcement that prioritize political outcomes over national security.

The most damaging failures include diluted citizenship standards, inadequate background checks during naturalization, permissive visa pathways that are rarely audited after entry, and loopholes that allow foreign money and foreign-linked interests to flow into American political campaigns. Dual citizenship in sensitive contexts further weakens the expectation of exclusive national loyalty, while limited congressional oversight has left critical immigration and naturalization policy concentrated in executive agencies with little long-term accountability.

“Every Democratic president we’ve had — Clinton, Obama, and Biden — has totally gutted the citizenship requirements.” —Peter Schweizer

That principle becomes the organizing standard for any serious reform agenda. If citizenship is no longer treated as a commitment to the Constitution and the nation, every other safeguard becomes cosmetic.

Based on that standard, several practical countermeasures emerge. Dual citizenship should be restricted where it conflicts with national allegiance.

Birth tourism must be explicitly prohibited. Political contributions from non-citizens and foreign-linked permanent residents should be barred and aggressively enforced.

Existing laws governing foreign political activity inside the United States must be applied consistently, including the removal of diplomats who interfere in domestic politics.

Equally important is the restoration of ideological scrutiny—the assessment of whether applicants affirm and accept the constitutional and legal foundations of the United States. Visa and residency decisions should examine not only paperwork compliance, but alignment with the civic obligations of citizenship.

Student visa programs must also be rigorously reviewed to ensure that students are present to study—not to participate in political operations, organized protest campaigns, or criminal and trafficking networks.

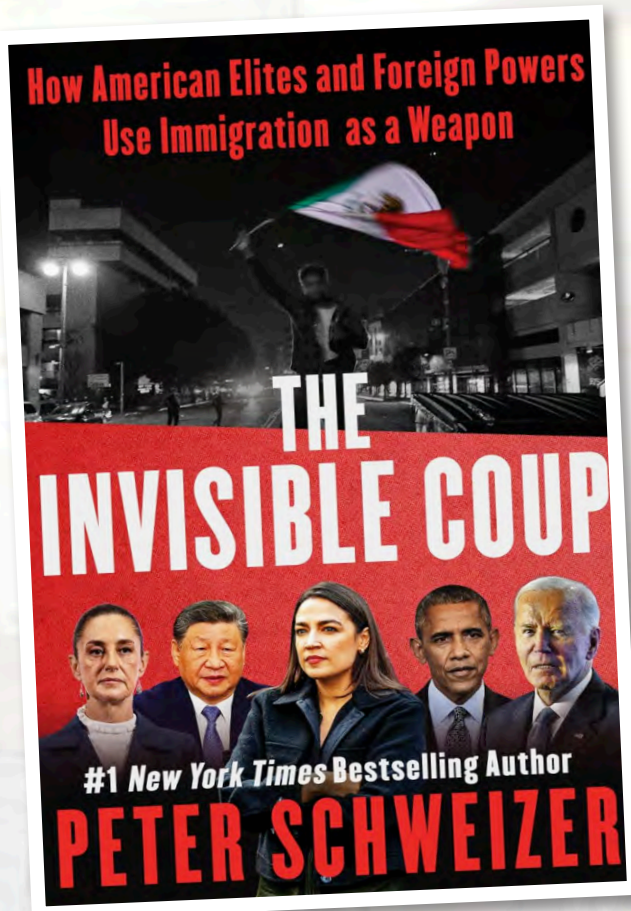

Finally, immigration and citizenship policy must return to meaningful congressional oversight. Without legislative accountability, enforcement priorities will continue to shift with political winds rather than national interest.

This is the closing loop in the threat architecture described throughout this briefing.

- » Demographic pressure creates openings.
- » Ideological alliances exploit them.
- » Foreign states build influence infrastructure.
- » Weak policy allows the entire system to persist.

Attention: Closing legal and enforcement gaps—especially around citizenship standards, birth tourism, political financing, and visa oversight—is essential to restoring allegiance-based citizenship and reducing foreign political and demographic exploitation inside the United States.

ACTION STEPS:

1. Read The Invisible Coup to learn more about these threats and to bolster your defense of American liberty with hard evidence.
2. Follow @PeterSchweizer on X!
3. Educate and brief your network—clients, peers, school leaders, and community stakeholders—on how immigration, citizenship, and visa systems can be exploited for geopolitical and ideological influence, and share credible research and case studies (including The Invisible Coup) to build informed local awareness.
4. Advocate directly for legislative reform by contacting your members of Congress to support measures that end birth tourism, strengthen citizenship and residency eligibility standards, prohibit political donations from non-citizens and foreign-linked permanent residents, and restore meaningful congressional oversight of immigration and citizenship policy rather than exclusive executive control.
5. Engage locally where influence operations take root by participating in school board and municipal meetings to review foreign-supplied educational materials, challenge coordinated political messaging campaigns, and support assimilation programs grounded in American civic and constitutional education.
6. Promote election integrity at the local and primary level by encouraging civic participation in low-turnout primaries and municipal elections—where organized minority blocs can exert disproportionate influence—and supporting candidates who prioritize border security, visa enforcement, and constitutional vetting.
7. Support and strengthen civil-society and reform organizations that work to protect national sovereignty and counter foreign political and cultural influence, and encourage others in your professional and community networks to do the same for sustained collective impact.
