

FIGHTING BACK: YOUR HOUSE

The last three Economic Battle Plans™ introduced the Four Horsemen of the American Apocalypse, showed the states restoring gold and silver as money, and laid out what the nation must do: sound money, fiscal discipline, sovereignty, and three institutions to make it stick. All of that matters, and all of it requires political will, which can take years, an election, or a crisis. This week is different. This week is addressed to you.

You do not need Congress to protect your savings from inflation, and you do not need the Federal Reserve to stop printing before you build resilience. This Economic Battle Plan™ walks through Chapters 13 and 14 of The Four Horsemen of the American Apocalypse and Our Six Trials by Fire in the order the book does, most urgent first. The book is the plan, with the sourcing, the numbers, and a one-page Personal Action Checklist. The horsemen are counting on you to wait. Build the ark while the sky is still clear.

In this briefing we will discuss the following:

- » The Financial Ark: Six Steps to Protect Your Purchasing Power Before the Flood
- » The Foundation That Outlasts Every Crisis: Your Marriage, Your Church, Your Neighbors, and Your Dollars
- » The Call to Courage: The Civic Checklist, Six Kinds of Courage, and Breaking the Apathy Stage

YOUR MISSION: Build your family's Financial Ark while the sky is still clear, strengthen the marriage, church, and neighborhood that outlast every crisis, and choose courage over comfort at the one place no horseman can reach without your permission: your own kitchen table.

WHY YOU SHOULD CARE

- » The Federal Reserve has made clear it stands ready to flood the system with liquidity in the next crisis, and every dollar created that way is a quiet tax on the savings already sitting in your account.
- » Central banks are voting with their vaults: the European Central Bank reported in June 2026 that gold made up 27% of global central bank reserves at the end of 2025, passing U.S. Treasuries at 22% to become the largest reserve asset after the dollar itself.
- » More than 7 in 10 Americans now say raising children is unaffordable, yet priced in gold, the median American home costs well under half of what it did in 1975, which means the affordability crisis is really a money crisis.
- » Social Security's retirement trust fund is projected to run dry in late 2032, and the family with real reserves, productive assets, and a community around it will not be frightened by the coming fight over benefits.
- » The decisions that shape what your children are taught are made in rooms with a dozen people in them, and the Yellow Horse (the traitors, cowards, and fools inside our own gates) is the one horseman you can vote out: at the school board, in the primary, and in your state legislature.

1. The Financial Ark: Six Steps to Protect Your Purchasing Power Before the Flood

The single most urgent personal preparation is protecting your purchasing power. Chapter 13 of The Four Horsemen of the American Apocalypse calls it the Financial Ark. The Federal Reserve has said plainly that it stands ready to flood the system with liquidity in the next crisis, and that is a promise to debase your savings.

“Noah did not build the ark during the flood. He built it before, while the neighbors were mocking, while the urgency felt theoretical. The financial ark does not need to be everything. It needs to be enough.” –Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

The smart money has already moved. Ray Dalio, founder of Bridgewater Associates, the world’s largest hedge fund, and quoted in Chapter 13, has been warning in public that the debt cycle ends the way it always ends: with the currency.

“During times when there were monetary and debt crises, and wars that increased the risk of confiscation, gold went up a lot in value. More accurately, it was the money that didn’t fall in value. Gold is the safest money.”
–Ray Dalio, founder, Bridgewater Associates

Step 1 is to open a Pirate Money account where it is available, or get ready to: state-authenticated gold and silver you can spend by debit card, protected from confiscation, barred from social credit scoring, and an opt-out from programmable money. TransactionalGold.com tracks where it stands in every state.

Step 2 is to hold some physical gold and silver personally, outside any financial institution's account. A promise from a financial institution is still a promise, and in a crisis, promises get renegotiated. Coins in your possession cannot be frozen by a bank, restricted by a social credit score, or confiscated by remote digital command, and they have held their purchasing power for centuries.

“Don’t necessarily start with silver because it feels cheaper; silver is more volatile. Gold is fractionalized. A gram is a fine start. Start small, learn quickly, and ramp up when you’re comfortable.” –Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

How much is a personal decision based on your own circumstances, but some is far better than none. The goal is not a hoard. It is an asset no one can switch off, freeze, or dilute. This is not investment advice. Kevin Freeman does not know your situation, so consult your own advisors before acting; Kevin and his partners hold investments in the transactional gold and silver space and disclose those holdings.

Step 3 is to pay down variable-rate debt as aggressively as your budget permits: credit cards, adjustable mortgages, and home equity lines, the debts that move against you first when rates move.

Step 4 is to review what sits inside your retirement accounts. A portfolio heavy in Treasury bonds holds a promise from the most indebted government in history. Central banks have already noticed: the European Central Bank reported in June 2026 that gold now makes up 27% of global central bank reserves, passing U.S. Treasuries at 22% as the largest official reserve asset after the dollar. Diversify into real assets where your plan permits.

Step 5 is to use cash, regularly. Carry some, support businesses that accept it, and if you own a business, accept it yourself. Support state and local efforts to require cash acceptance. Cash is the last financial instrument that leaves no digital trace, cannot be frozen, and cannot be programmed with restrictions. Multiplied across millions of Americans, that small habit keeps the infrastructure of privacy alive. Step 6 is an emergency fund of three to six months of expenses in liquid assets. Boring, but essential.

“I know these six steps sound modest next to the scale of the threat. That is the point. The horsemen’s strategy is patient and enormous. Your defense is small, specific, and started today.” –Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

One more step is not on the financial list but belongs at the top of it.

“Have the direct conversation with your spouse and your family about all of this. The ark must be a family project. A plan one person knows about is not a plan. It is a secret.” –Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

Before acting on any of it, run each choice through the filter applied to every decision in the Economic War Room: Liberty, Security, Values. Liberty asks whether a choice makes your family freer or hands a switch to someone else. Security asks whether it makes you safer against the trials already coming: inflation, a dollar crisis, programmable money. Values asks whether it is consistent with what you believe and what you want to hand to your children. A central bank digital currency is convenient, but it fails Liberty on the first question. A 30-year fixed mortgage at a rate you can afford is boring, but it passes Security, because the debt cannot move against you. A church building fund passes Values in a way a lottery ticket never will.

“Gold in your hand passes all three. A dollar a third party can restrict passes none. That is the whole logic of the Financial Ark. You are not trying to get rich. You are trying to stay free.” –Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

The filter is not new. Liberty, security, and values are written into the opening lines of the Constitution: secure the blessings of liberty, provide for the common defense, establish justice. Once you start asking those three questions, the Yellow Horse always fails at least one of them, and that is how you recognize him at your own kitchen table. The filter works at the scale of a nation and at the scale of a checkbook, because a household is a small republic.

Attention: The Financial Ark is built before the flood, while the sky is still clear. Most families can complete the first three steps this month.

3. The Foundation That Outlasts Every Crisis: Your Marriage, Your Church, Your Neighbors, and Your Dollars

The most durable preparation for any crisis, financial, social, or spiritual, is not in a vault. It is in a household, a congregation, and a neighborhood. Chapter 13 calls it the foundation that outlasts every crisis, and it starts with Step 1: invest in your marriage and your family. Charlie Kirk’s final public message was simple: get married young and have more kids than you think you can afford. That is financial advice as much as moral advice.

“Children are expensive in fiat dollars precisely because fiat dollars have been debased. The barriers your kids face are artifacts of a monetary system, not laws of nature. Don’t let the Cantillon effect steal a generation from you. Build your family.” –Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

The Cantillon effect, named for the 18th-century economist Richard Cantillon, describes how newly created money benefits those who receive it first (governments, banks, and those who already own assets) while everyone further down the line pays higher prices before their wages catch up. In 2025, more than 7 in 10 Americans told the American Family Survey that raising children is unaffordable. That feeling is real. The cause is not the housing market. In 1975 the median American home cost about $40,000, roughly 250 ounces of gold. Today the median home costs about $400,000, and with gold above $4,000 an ounce, the same home costs less than 100 ounces.

“You can buy two and a half homes today for the gold it took to buy one home fifty years ago. Affordability is not a housing crisis. It is a money crisis. The families who cannot afford a home are victims of fiat money, and the cure is honest money, not another subsidy.” –Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

Charlie Kirk described what a right-wing revolution would actually look like: not a coup, but a revival. Church attendance up, family formation up, young people marrying younger, the fertility rate reversed, less stealing, less looting, and a return of virtue. Then he said that everything on that list is a choice. Your marriage and your children are the most consequential choice on it, and the one no government can make for you. Chapter 10 of the book, Demographic Destiny, is the chapter to hand any young couple who has been told they cannot afford a family. The charts are in there: priced in gold, the cost of forming a family has fallen.

Step 2 is to engage deeply with your church, the single institution best positioned to teach the principles that make households resilient. In his sermon The Use of Money, John Wesley gave his people three rules that still work. Earn all you can, ethically: work hard, work honestly, and produce real value. Save and invest all you can: spend less than you earn, build reserves, and keep your family off the paycheck-to-paycheck treadmill if at all possible. Give all you can: wealth held in closed hands produces nothing, and the purpose of earning and saving is not accumulation. It is the freedom to give.

“Notice the order. Earn, then save, then give. Most churches teach the third without the first two, and most financial advisors teach the first two without the third. Wesley taught all three to coal miners and mill workers, and they built the middle class of a nation.”

—Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

A church that teaches these principles and then acts on them is a Financial Ark for an entire congregation. The challenge to pastors is direct: preach Wesley’s three rules, and then help your people do them. A congregation that earns honestly, lives below its means, and gives generously will come through the next crisis as a body, not as a collection of frightened individuals.

Step 3 is to build a real local network. Identify three neighbors you would truly help in a crisis, and who would help you. During the 2021 Texas freeze and during the pandemic, the neighborhoods that came through were not the richest; they were the ones where people knew each other’s names. That is not sentiment. It is infrastructure, and it costs a conversation across the fence. Communities that know each other do not need rescuing.

The book adds a step most people would rather not hear: reduce your dependence on government programs. This is not a call to walk away from benefits you have paid into. It is a recognition that Social Security and Medicare are mathematically under strain. The 2026 Trustees Report projects that Social Security’s retirement trust fund will be depleted in late 2032, after which incoming revenue covers only about 78% of scheduled retirement benefits. A family with real reserves, productive assets, and a community around it is not frightened by the debates over benefit restructuring. The family without them is.

Faith, money, and the founding were never separate stories. In the 1730s and 1740s, the English evangelist George Whitefield preached up and down the colonies in the revival known as the Great Awakening, and it prepared the spiritual soil for the Revolution. One of Whitefield's closest friends and greatest promoters was Benjamin Franklin, the Philadelphia printer whose shop also printed colonial paper money and who helped design the Continental currency that followed. Franklin watched firsthand what happens when a government prints money to pay for a war. The Continental collapsed, and "not worth a Continental" became a national saying.

At the Constitutional Convention on June 28, 1787, with the delegates deadlocked over representation, that same Franklin rose to move that each session open with prayer. Within weeks the deadlock broke in the Great Compromise. On money, the former paper-money printer stood with the Pennsylvania delegation for what became Article I, Section 10, and the Constitution Franklin signed that September says no state shall make any thing but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts.

"I have lived, Sir, a long time, and the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth: that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without His aid?"

—Benjamin Franklin, Constitutional Convention, June 28, 1787

"The man who said that had printed the paper money and watched it die. Honest money and humble faith came from the same lesson. Faith and honest money were not separate projects for the Founders. They were the same project."

—Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

Chapter 13 says it directly: personally return to God's principles as the foundation, and everything else is built on that. The book points to A Great Awakening, released by Sight & Sound Films on April 3, 2026, a cinematic retelling of the friendship between Whitefield and Franklin. If the first Great Awakening could prepare a people to found a republic, a second one can prepare a people to keep it.

Step 4 is where your money talks: consumer sovereignty. Every dollar you spend funds something. You can write the check to companies that despise you, or to companies that share your values, and it is not new money; it is a switch. Charlie Kirk made exactly that pitch about a phone plan you already pay for. The same logic applies to investments. Art Ally founded Timothy Plan 30 years ago on the conviction that the money you invest is never morally neutral; it is always funding something, and the only question is whether you choose what you are funding.

Run the audit at home: your bank, your phone carrier, your streaming services, where your kids go to school, and the companies inside your 401(k). Dr. Jim Garlow, a member of the book's Council of Voices, saw the Yellow Horse during COVID in the cowardice of people he once trusted.

“Each one is a check you are writing, every month, to somebody's agenda. Consumer sovereignty is how you stop funding that cowardice with your own paycheck.”

—Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

One consumer choice matters more than most: buy the book, and buy a second copy for someone who needs to see the whole picture. A book on a coffee table gets read by people a website never reaches.

Attention: The foundation that outlasts every crisis is not in a vault. It is your marriage, your congregation, your neighbors, and the checks you choose to write.

3. The Call to Courage: The Civic Checklist, Six Kinds of Courage, and Breaking the Apathy Stage

The last piece is your citizenship, and it matters most not only in Washington, but at the levels where the Yellow Horse operates most freely because nobody is watching. The civic checklist starts at the ballot box: vote on fiscal responsibility and constitutional principle, not on promised benefits.

“Every vote cast on the basis of ‘what will this candidate give me?’ advances the Debt Bomb. And the most consequential decisions about what your children are taught are made in rooms with 12 people in them.” —Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

Engage locally. Identify your school board members by name and attend at least one meeting this year. Lt. Gen. Michael Flynn, former director of the Defense Intelligence Agency, put the principle in the book plainly.

“Intelligence has value only when we are willing to recognize the warning signs and act before the threat becomes a crisis.” —LTG (Ret.) Michael T. Flynn

That is true of a nation, and it is true of a school district: show up before the vote, not after.

Support Pirate Money legislation in your state with one call to your state representative and one to your state senator.

“It is already law in 6 states and pending in up to 20 more. Your call is how it gets to yours. And if your state will not move, vote with your feet. That is a legitimate American answer, and millions have already given it.” –Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

Kelly Shackelford of First Liberty Institute, a member of the book’s Council of Voices, ended his note on the book with six words: “Wake up. Stand up. Speak up.” Everything on the civic checklist is one of those three. Register at EconomicJusticeBoard.com and SCANHQ.com, and vote in your primary, where the candidates who make policy are actually chosen.

Chapter 13 also supplies an awareness toolkit. Subscribe to the free Economic Battle Plan™, organized around exactly this material. Read Pirate Money (PirateMoneyBook.com) for the constitutional case for honest money. Follow the Atlantic Council’s Central Bank Digital Currency Tracker so you know how close programmable money is. And know how much of your own retirement account sits in Treasury bonds. The Personal Action Checklist in the back of the book organizes all of it on one page: financial protection first, awareness and civic engagement second, and family, community, and faith third. You can return to it without rereading the chapter.

“Bill Federer was right: silence is consent. If you are silent in the face of what you now know, you are cosigning it. That goes for pastors in the pulpit, parents at the school board, and every one of us in the voting booth.” –Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

That is why the book calls the Yellow Horse the one you can vote out. Red, Green, and Blue do not stand for election in your county. The people who let them in do, and every seat on that ballot is a door.

Chapter 14, The Call to Courage, is honest about what kind of courage this moment requires. It is not battlefield courage. It is quieter, and in some ways harder: sustained engagement with unglamorous work, against social pressure telling you to stay disengaged. It names six kinds: the courage to be informed and to share what you know; to vote on principle rather than promise; to show up locally; to protect your family financially, holding gold when your neighbors hold bonds and using cash when digital is more convenient; to form and sustain a family; and to speak honestly about what is happening, respectfully, documented, and without malice.

“The pushback you will get for speaking honestly is almost always social, rarely legal. Somebody will call you a name. Charlie’s answer to that was simply: ‘So what?’ Find another job. Find another friend. America was not built on a surrender spirit.”

—Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

Dr. Ben Carson wrote in his foreword that courage will be required to enact the book’s suggestions. Sharing it is the first act of that courage, and the easiest one on the list. Together, the six describe a person: informed, principled at the ballot box, present at the local meeting, financially prepared, building a family, and unafraid to say what is true. Not one of them requires anyone’s permission. That is why the book ends with courage and not with policy. Policy follows people like that; it never precedes them.

The book closes with the Tytler cycle, the sequence through which free nations have historically passed: bondage to spiritual faith, faith to courage, courage to liberty, liberty to abundance, abundance to complacency, complacency to apathy, apathy to dependence, and dependence back into bondage. America is at the apathy stage, where people still have their freedom and have stopped using it. Every uncontested school board seat, every primary with 12% turnout, and every citizen who knows and stays quiet is apathy doing its work.

“The good news about apathy is that it is the cheapest stage to reverse. Nobody has to storm anything. They just have to show up. The cycle is not destiny. It breaks when enough people, at this precise moment, choose courage instead of comfort.”

—Kevin D. Freeman, D.Sc. (h.c.), CFA

America has found her courage before. The Founders faced the world's most powerful empire with farmers and tradesmen. The World War II generation spent the 1930s in denial, then built the greatest mobilization in history. The Cold War took 40 years of vigilance, and the Soviet system collapsed because America had the confidence to outlast it. The four horsemen are not more formidable than any of those, only more patient, and they have no answer to an informed, engaged, courageous citizenry. That is what they fear most. In Mark 3, no one can plunder a strong man's house without first binding the strong man. The strong man is not a government. It is a nation of households like yours.

Charlie Kirk, to whom the book is dedicated, sat in the Economic War Room studio on September 11, 2024, and described what a revival would look like: the balanced budget, the sound currency, the families, the return to church. Then he named what all of it has in common.

“Everything I just talked about is a choice. The beautiful is not an abstract. The beautiful is a choice in front of us.” —Charlie Kirk, Economic War Room, September 11, 2024
